ACHC and AMTA Partner to Advance Mobile Dentistry

CARY, N.C. – Accreditation Commission for Health Care (ACHC) announced today it is entering into a strategic relationship with the American Mobile & Teledentistry Alliance (AMTA), a nonprofit professional association dedicated to supporting alternative care delivery methods for dental services.

“ACHC and AMTA are mutually committed to advancing mobile dentistry practices and improving patient outcomes,” said Tim Safley, ACHC Program Director. “This collaboration strengthens our shared focus of supporting access to quality dental care beyond traditional settings.”

“With the demand for mobile healthcare delivery on the rise among dental patients, it’s important to work together to create support for dental practices interested in providing mobile services,” said Sonya Dunbar, AMTA Founding Board Member.

“Healthcare and technological innovations have made it easier than ever for clinicians to provide mobile and virtual care, and this collaboration with ACHC will help guide dentistry into the future,” said Melissa Turner, AMTA Founding Board Member.

The collaboration gives AMTA members special pricing on ACHC Mobile Dentistry Accreditation. Discounts on ACHCU educational resources also are available.

About AMTA

The American Mobile & Teledentistry Alliance (AMTA) consists of individual healthcare professionals, medical and dental practices, corporate partners, and other stakeholders whose interests are to help facilitate the advancement of mobile and teledentistry.

Organizational partners are those who provide clinical or supportive services, affiliated site partners, product and service companies, health departments, coalitions, and others.
