ACHC and TAHC Renew Partnership

CARY, N.C. – National accreditor Accreditation Commission for Health Care (ACHC) announced today it is renewing its partnership with the Tennessee Association for Home Care (TAHC), a statewide advocate for home health, hospice, and home care/private duty providers.

“ACHC and TAHC are mutually committed to enhancing quality of care and improving patient outcomes,” said Susan Mills, ACHC Senior Program Director. “TAHC is dedicated to ensuring providers have access to essential information and resources that drive continuous quality improvement and promote the best practices.”

“TAHC is thrilled to continue our relationship with ACHC,” said Maegan Carr Martin, TAHC Executive Director. “Not only does our partnership give our members exclusive discounts on accreditation services, but this particular cost-saving opportunity does so in a way that makes it easier for agencies to achieve and maintain high standards of quality care.

“Accreditation promotes excellence in care delivery, fosters trust with patients and families, and helps agencies stay ahead of regulatory changes. Our relationship with ACHC ultimately strengthens the entire home care industry in Tennessee, improving outcomes for both providers and those they serve.”

The partnership gives TAHC members special pricing on ACHC Accreditation. Discounts on select ACHCU educational resources are also available.

About TAHC

The Tennessee Association for Home Care (TAHC) has proudly served Tennessee’s home care, hospice, and personal support services industries for over 40 years. As a nonprofit trade association, we are deeply committed to advocating for the interests of our members at both the state and federal levels. We provide members with the tools, resources, and training needed to navigate regulatory challenges, improve quality, and ensure compliance. TAHC is committed to empowering our members to deliver compassionate, high-quality care that enhances the lives of individuals and families throughout Tennessee.
